

I met Peter only once before, and I have to admit that I was apprehensive about Tanner going to Peter's Mini Workshops.

Tanner really enjoys the workshops. He comes home from them a bit maturer, a lot more rejuvenated and even more excited about acting than before. He tells me about his experiences over time, and it sounds not only fun, but there is some intense work, as well as some good life lessons. All of what he learns helps build confidence.

He enjoys the food, but it was not that much of a stretch for him. (He brings sardines to school for lunch to the dismay of his fellow diners). We all eat even better because of his new improved diet.

Now I know when I send Tanner to Peter's Mini Workshop, and the summer workshop, he's learning a great deal. He's with kids that appreciate many of the same things he does, and he can do what he loves and enjoy the company. I am no longer apprehensive.
