Dear Peter,

I wanted to let you know how much fun Kurtis had at the recent Beginnings Workshop. As you know, I was pretty stressed about letting him go. I'm a homeschooler – my kids don't leave to go to school for the day. The idea of sending my child away for eight nights was completely foreign to me. But he really wanted to go, and I knew that it was time to loosen my iron-clad apron strings.

And I'm very glad I did. I see a level of confidence in Kurtis that wasn't there before the workshop. And, as I have already stated, he had a fantastic time. He hasn't stopped talking about the things that he learned, the VIPs that he met, and the friends that he made. (He has also raved non-stop about the black bean stew that was served at one of the meals.)

Everything about the workshop, from both my perspective as well as Kurtis's, far exceeded my expectations, and that is saying a lot as I have very high standards and my expectations were high to begin with. The next time you have an overly paranoid parent like me, I hope you will give them my phone number.

Sincerely,

Karen Burton
