Dear Peter,

First of all, we would like to say that you were right when you said, "Children do not get homesick, parents get homesick". My wife and I constantly wondered what Courtney was doing each and every minute of the day. Wondering if she was enjoying herself or maybe she was miserable. Needless to say, enjoying herself was the understatement of the year. When we saw Courtney on stage at the theatre, we could see the joy she was feeling even though she knew after her monologue, the workshop would be over. When we met her outside the theatre after the showcase, she immediately started talking about all of the classes she had taken and what she had learned in each class. She talked about her "magic" class, the monologue she had to memorize, the chaperones and all of the friends she met from all over the United States. She just talked and talked and talked about "Beginnings". She Loved It! Peter, I must say, it is now July and she is still talking about "Beginnings".

We just wanted to take this time to write and say thank you. If there are any parents in the future who would like to talk to another parent about the "Beginnings" workshop, please feel free to give them our name and telephone number. We would love to talk to them about the "Beginnings" workshop, because it would be the experience of a lifetime for their child.

Sincerely,

Myles K. Hudson
